

Special Issue on Innovation and Industrial Management

Call for Papers

Industrial management is a kind of management process that designs and maintains a good environment to plan, organize, coordinate, communicate and control the industry in order to realize the goal of industrial development and national macro-control. The spirit of innovation is the inexhaustible motive force of industrial innovation. Industrial innovation is the creative destruction of the old industrial structure. From its inherent logic analysis, industrial innovation can be divided into four levels: technological innovation, product innovation, market innovation and industrial integration. Industrial innovation influences industrial scale from the level of industrial value creation and productive capacity, and improves the ability of industry to occupy the market and expand. It is an inevitable trend of social productivity progress and industrial structure upgrading.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original researches and review articles on exploring innovation and industrial management. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Technological innovation
- Product innovation
- Market innovation
- Industrial integration
- Industrial upgrading
- Market demand
- Project management
- Marketing strategies and internationalization
- Supplier partnership and supply-chain management
