

2. Second plea in law, alleging breach of the fundamental principle of protection of property rights:

- the applicant depositors have been deprived of their property rights as a result of measures adopted by European Union institutions;
- the applicant depositors have not been granted fair compensation for their resultant loss, in breach of the fundamental principle of protection of property rights;
- the said breaches were sufficiently serious in that the institutions manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on their discretion; and
- there is a direct causal link between the breaches and the damage sustained by the applicants.

Action brought on 2 March 2018 — UE v Commission

(Case T-148/18)

(2018/C 166/47)

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: UE (represented by: S. Rodrigues and A. Champetier, lawyers)

Defendant: European Commission

Form of order sought

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision adopted by the Commission on 20 November 2017 rejecting her complaint related to a request for compensation of the damage suffered by the applicant;
- grant the compensation of the moral prejudice suffered by the fault of the defendant, evaluated at the sum of 10 000 euros and;
- order the reimbursement of the applicant's incurred costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

In support of the action, the applicant relies on two pleas in law.

1. First plea in law, alleging the violation by the defendant of the principle of sound administration and of Article 41 of the Charter on the principle of reasonable delay.
2. Second plea in law, alleging the respect by the applicant of the principle of reasonable delay in the submission of the request for assistance.
