EUROPEAN FOUNDATION FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF LIVING AND WORKING CONDITIONS

COMMUTING: THE EUROPEAN DIMENSION

Commuting, as the activity linking home and work, can affect behaviour in the workplace as well as outside work. In turn, the demands placed on workers by their job or lifestyle will also affect the satisfaction they have with their commuting journeys.

The Foundation's research programme comprised three projects:

- a critical appraisal of commuting research and policy in the European Community including an analysis of commuting statistics,
- research on the impact of commuting on the health and safety of workers,
- research to examine the role of the parties involved in decisions concerning the planning, financing and operating of commuter transport.

The findings of these researches were then used to produce three publications, one of which is the present summary report. The three are designed to satisfy different requirements, as follows:

- Commuting — The European dimension
Summary report on the research findings
- Commuting — The European dimension
A bibliography
- Commuting in the European Community
