

INSTRUCTIONS

1

Open the box and take out the contents: the growkit, grow bag, two trays of black soil and a paperclip.

2

Wash your hands thoroughly with soap and remove the grow kit lid. Spread the black soil evenly over the grow kit.

3

Spray the top layer of the kit with water and make sure it is moist. Also spray the inside of the bag. Make sure there is enough oxygen in the bag and put in the grow kit. Close the bag with the paperclip.

4

Make sure to spray the grow kit daily and give it some fresh oxygen. You can squeeze the bag to make sure the oxygen refreshes. It is important to keep the top layer of the kit moist.

5

After 6 - 11 days the first mushrooms will form. At this moment you can take the kit out of the bag briefly. Spray the inside of the bag and put the grow kit back in the bag. (Hawaiian mushrooms don't like direct contact with water).

6

About 5-7 days after the mushrooms started growing, they are ready to be plucked. Start plucking just before the caps are starting to open. Try to do this just before the first black spores drop, but don't worry if that has already happened. Wash your hands and carefully pull the mushrooms out of the kit.

7

After you have harvested the whole flush, you can repeat the whole process from step 3 (misting) and the cycle will repeat itself. The most important thing is to keep the grow kit moist and make sure it gets fresh air daily. Keep in mind that Hawaiian Copelandia is a much more delicate product compared to other mushroom grow kits.
