How we did this

This Pew Research Center analysis covers Israeli attitudes on the Israel-Hamas war, including opinions on how it's being conducted, the country's future, Israeli political leaders and the United States' role in the conflict.

The data is from a survey of 1,001 Israeli adults conducted face-to-face from March 3 to April 4, 2024. Interviews were conducted in Hebrew and Arabic, and the survey is representative of the adult population ages 18 and older, excluding those in East Jerusalem and non-sanctioned outposts. (The survey also did not cover the West Bank or Gaza.) The survey included an oversample of Arabs in Israel. It was subsequently weighted to be representative of the Israeli adult population with the following variables: gender by ethnicity, age by ethnicity, education, region, urbanicity and probability of selection of respondent.

Here are the questions used for the report, along with responses, and the survey methodology.

Israeli Views of the Israel-Hamas War

Jewish Israelis and Arab Israelis see the war very differently

A new Pew Research Center survey finds that 39% of Israelis say Israel's military response against Hamas in Gaza has been about right, while 34% say it has not gone far enough and 19% think it has gone too far.

According to the survey, conducted in March and early April, roughly two-thirds of Israelis are also confident that Israel will either probably (27%) or definitely (40%) achieve its goals in the war against Hamas. Still, majorities of Israeli adults are worried about aspects of the ongoing war:

- 61% say they are extremely or very concerned about the war expanding into other countries in the region.
- 68% say they are extremely or very concerned about the war going on for a long time.

When it comes to what should happen after the war, there is less consensus. A 40% plurality of Israelis think Israel should govern the Gaza Strip. Smaller shares think Gazans should decide who governs (14%) or would like to see a Palestinian Authority national unity government either with (6%) or without (12%) President Mahmoud Abbas (also known as Abu Mazen) in leadership.

Separately, 26% of Israelis think a way can be found for Israel and an independent Palestinian state to coexist peacefully with each other – down from 35% who said the same last year, prior to the war, and about half as many as took that position when the question was first asked in 2013.

These are among the key findings of a new survey of 1,001 Israelis, conducted via face-to-face interviews from March 3 to April 4, 2024.

The survey also asked Israelis about the U.S. role in the conflict. (It was conducted before U.S. President Joe Biden took a tougher stance toward Israel in the wake of an Israeli airstrike that killed seven World Central Kitchen aid workers. And it predates Biden's declaration that the U.S. would not provide offensive weapons to Israel in the event of a Rafah invasion as well as the subsequent Israeli strikes in Rafah.)

Research in the West Bank and Gaza

Pew Research Center has polled the Palestinian territories in previous years, but we were unable to conduct fieldwork in Gaza or the West Bank for our March/April 2024 survey due to security concerns. We are actively investigating possibilities for both qualitative and quantitative research on public opinion in the region and hope to be able to provide more data in the coming months.

The survey shows:

- 60% of Israelis disapprove of the way Biden is handling the Israel-Hamas war.
- 41% think Biden is striking the right balance between Israelis and Palestinians. Still, 27% of Israelis say he is favoring Israelis too much, while roughly the same share (25%) say he favors Palestinians too much.
- Most Israelis express confidence in Biden to handle world affairs and have a favorable view of the U.S. But ratings of both Biden and the U.S. have fallen at least 10 percentage points since last year. (For more on this, read “How Israelis and Americans view one another and the U.S. role in the Israel-Hamas war.”)

Nonetheless, a large majority (72%) still want the U.S. to play a major role in diplomatically resolving the war – more than say the same about any of the other countries or organizations asked about, including Egypt (45%), Saudi Arabia (29%), Qatar (27%) and the United Nations (24%).

Arab and Jewish Israelis

People across Israeli society perceive the war in vastly different ways, depending on their views of the current leadership, how they identify ideologically, their religious backgrounds and other factors. One of the starkest divides is between Arab and Jewish Israelis:

- Arab Israelis are less likely than Jewish Israelis to think Israel will succeed in achieving its war aims (38% vs. 76%) and less optimistic when thinking about the future of the country's national security (21% vs. 63%).
- Israeli Arabs are much more likely than Jews to say the country's military response has gone too far (74% vs. 4%).
- Almost no Israeli Arabs (3%) want Israel to govern the Gaza Strip after the war, while half of Israeli Jews think it should do so. A plurality of Arabs would like the people who live in Gaza to decide who governs (37%), while only 8% of Jews prefer this outcome.
- Arab Israelis have much less favorable views of the U.S. than Jewish Israelis do (29% vs. 90%), as well as less confidence in Biden (21% vs. 66%). They are also much more likely to disapprove of Biden's handling of the war (86% vs. 53%) and to think he favors Israelis too much (86% vs. 11%).
- Although a majority of Arabs (63%) want the U.S. to play a major role in diplomatically resolving the war between Israel and Hamas, an even greater share of Jewish Israelis (74%) want this. And roughly two-thirds of Arabs are open to Qatar and Egypt playing a major role, while only about four-in-ten Jews or fewer say the same.

- Roughly nine-in-ten Arabs (92%) have a negative view of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, compared with around half of Jews (48%). Views of the two other war cabinet members, Benny Gantz and Yoav Gallant, are also divided along ethnic lines. (The survey was conducted before Gantz threatened to leave the war cabinet.)

In many cases, there are also large ideological differences, with Israelis who describe themselves as being on the left generally more critical of Israel’s war response, less optimistic about its success and more critical of the U.S. than those on the right. There also tend to be differences among Israeli Jews based on how religiously observant they are. For more on how we looked at these differences, refer to the box below.

Jewish religious groups in Israel: Haredim, Datiim, Masortim and Hilonim

Nearly all Israeli Jews identify as either Haredi (commonly translated as “ultra-Orthodox”), Dati (“religious”), Masorti (“traditional”) or Hiloni (“secular”). The spectrum of religious observance in Israel – on which Haredim are generally the most religious and Hilonim the least – does not always line up perfectly with Israel’s political spectrum. On some issues, including those pertaining to religion in public life, there is a clear overlap: Haredim are furthest to the right, and Hilonim are furthest to the left, with Datiim and Masortim in between. But on other political issues, including those related to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and views of the United States, differences between religious groups do not always mirror those between people at different points on the ideological spectrum. Because of sample size considerations, we combine Haredim and Datiim for analysis in this report.

For more information on the different views of these religious groups, read the Center’s 2016 deep dive on the topic, “Israel’s Religiously Divided Society.”

1. Views of the Israel-Hamas war

At the time of the survey in March and early April, Israelis voiced differing views of the war. Reactions to the military response against Hamas were generally mixed, as were attitudes toward the principal decision-makers – the three members of Israel’s war cabinet. However, most Israelis shared concerns that the war could expand across the region and last a long time.

Views of the Israeli military response against Hamas

When asked to assess their country’s military response against Hamas in Gaza, about four-in-ten Israelis say it has been about right. Another 34% say it has not gone far enough, while 19% say it has gone too far.

Israeli Arabs are much more critical of the military response, with 74% saying it has gone too far. Only 4% of Israeli Jews agree.

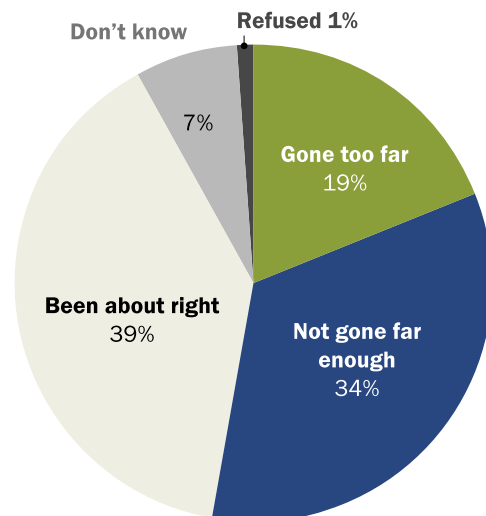

Views of the military response are divided along ideological lines. Roughly half of those who place themselves on the right (52%) say the military response has been insufficient. About a quarter of those in the center (24%) agree and only 9% of Israelis on the left say the same.

On the other hand, a majority of Israelis on the ideological left (55%) say the military response to Hamas has gone too far. Only 15% of those in the center and 5% of those on the right share this view.

Among Israelis who have a favorable view of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, roughly half (49%) say the response to Hamas has been about right, but another 45% say it has not gone far enough. Only 1% of those who favor Netanyahu think the military response has gone too far.

Attitudes toward Israel’s war cabinet

In the days following the Oct. 7 attack on Israel, the country’s then-governing coalition struck a deal with National Unity, an opposition party, to join an emergency government. The leader of the party, Benny Gantz, together with Netanyahu and Minister of Defense Yoav Gallant, formed the core of the new war cabinet, which was tasked with navigating the course of the conflict. (The survey was conducted before Gantz threatened to leave the war cabinet.)

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Of the cabinet’s three voting members, Gallant enjoys the most public support in our survey: 61% of Israelis say they have a very or somewhat favorable view of him. Around half say the same about Gantz. As for Netanyahu, approximately four-in-ten Israelis have a positive view of the prime minister.

For more on views of Palestinian leaders, refer to Chapter 3.

The majority of Israelis (58%) see their prime minister in a negative light. The share of Israelis who have a somewhat or very unfavorable view of Netanyahu is the largest it has been since the Center first started asking the question in 2013, up 6 percentage points from last year.

Related: A growing share of Americans have little or no confidence in Netanyahu

Netanyahu's favorability ratings have fallen among Jews and Arabs alike. However, roughly half of Israeli Jews still see him positively, compared with only 7% of Israeli Arabs.

Favorability among right-leaning Israelis – the mainstay of Netanyahu's political coalition – has also declined. In this group, 69% have a favorable view of Netanyahu, compared with 85% last year.

Views of the three members of Israel’s war cabinet vary by ethnicity, ideology and levels of religious observance.

- About three-quarters of Israeli Jews have a favorable view of Gallant, but only 9% of Israeli Arabs agree. Of the three war cabinet members, Gantz has the highest share of support among Israeli Arabs (30%).

Israeli Jews mostly favor war cabinet members, Israeli Arabs are much more skeptical

- Among those on the ideological right, about two-thirds have a favorable view of the prime minister. Only 18% of centrists and 8% of those on the left share this view. Gantz, a centrist party leader, is favored by 71% of Israelis in the center and a smaller majority (56%) of those on the left.

- Most Hiloni (“secular”) Jews in Israel (76%) say they have a favorable view of Gantz – more than double the share of Haredim (“ultra-Orthodox”) and Datiim (“religious”) who say the same (32%). Netanyahu, who relied on religious parties and their voters to build his governing coalition, is seen favorably by 88% of Haredi and Dati Jews, but by only 21% of the Hiloni public.

Most who have a favorable view of the prime minister feel similarly about Gallant, his minister of defense and fellow Likud member (84% have a favorable view of him). Gantz has less appeal among those who express a favorable view of Netanyahu – only about a third in this group also hold a favorable view of his political rival.

Current concerns about the war

Thinking about the course of the war, most Israelis express a great deal of concern about its scope and duration.

Around six-in-ten are extremely or very concerned about the war expanding to other countries in the region, and about seven-in-ten are seriously worried about the war lasting a long time. (The survey was fielded amid escalating conflict along Israel’s border with Lebanon but prior to Iran’s missile attack on Israel in mid-April.)

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Jewish and Arab Israelis are equally concerned that the war might expand to other countries (61% in each group voice this concern), though Arabs are slightly more likely than Jews to say they worry about a long war (77% vs. 66%).

Approximately a quarter of Israelis on the ideological left and in the center are extremely concerned about the war expanding across the region – roughly double the share of right-leaning Israelis who express the same level of alarm.

2. Israeli views of Biden, the U.S. and diplomacy in resolving the conflict

In our survey fielded from March 3 to April 4, 2024 – prior to the Biden administration’s statement about halting the shipment of some arms to Israel – Israelis offer somewhat mixed reviews of President Joe Biden and his actions during the conflict.

For example, while 57% of Israelis express confidence in U.S. President Joe Biden to do the right thing regarding world affairs, a similar share (60%) disapprove of his handling of the ongoing war. Still, roughly seven-in-ten Israelis want the U.S. to play a major role in diplomatically resolving the conflict, more than say this about the United Nations or any other country we asked about.

Confidence in Biden

A slim majority of Israelis (57%) have confidence in Biden to do the right thing regarding world affairs.

Overall, older Israelis are more confident in Biden than younger Israelis. For example, among Israelis ages 65 or older, 69% express at least some confidence in Biden, compared with 56% of those ages 18 to 29.

Israelis on the ideological right or center are more confident in Biden than those on the left. About six-in-ten on the right or in the center express confidence in Biden, compared with roughly half of Israelis who place themselves on the left.

Jewish Israelis also have more confidence in Biden than Arab Israelis do (66% vs. 21%). About half of Arabs say they have no confidence at all in Biden to do the right thing on the world stage.

Confidence in Biden is tied to people's approval of his handling of the Israel-Hamas war. Israelis who approve of his handling of the war are much more confident in him than those who disapprove (92% vs. 33%). Additionally, Israelis who think Biden is striking the right balance between support for Israelis and Palestinians are much more confident in him to do the right thing regarding world affairs (84% confident) than those who say he is favoring Israel too much (36%) or the Palestinians too much (39%).

How views of Biden have changed over time

Confidence in Biden among Israelis is down from 68% last year and closer to the share who had confidence in him in 2022 (60%). Israeli Jews' views follow the same pattern.

In contrast, among Israeli Arabs, views of Biden have declined significantly since 2022. (We were unable to survey in Israel during the first year of Biden's presidency because of the COVID-19 pandemic.)

While support declined since last year among all ideological groups, the greatest decreases have come among those in the center (down 20 percentage points) and on the left (down 21 points). Meanwhile, confidence among those on the right has fallen much less (down 7 points).

Views of how Biden is handling the Israel-Hamas war

More Israelis disapprove than approve of how Biden is dealing with the conflict between Israel and Hamas (60% vs. 39%).

Arabs in Israel are more critical of Biden’s handling of the war than Jews (86% vs. 53%). Indeed, 71% of Arabs say they strongly disapprove of his approach to the conflict. Views among Jewish Israelis are more mixed.

As with overall confidence in Biden, opinions about which side he favors in the conflict are related to evaluations of how he has handled the war. Those who say Biden is striking the right balance are more likely to approve of his handling of the conflict (63%) than those who say he is either favoring the Israelis (28%) or the Palestinians (16%) too much.

Who is Biden favoring in the conflict, or is he striking the right balance?

Roughly four-in-ten Israelis say Biden is favoring each group the right amount while roughly a quarter each think he is either favoring the Israelis (27%) or the Palestinians (25%) too much.

Arab Israelis (86%) overwhelmingly say Biden is favoring the Israelis too much. Only 11% of Jewish Israelis share this view. Instead, about half of Jews (48%) say he’s striking the right balance, and an additional 32% say he is favoring the Palestinians too much.

Those on the left are most likely to say Biden favors the Israelis too much, while those

The largest share of Israelis across age groups say Biden is striking the right balance. However, those ages 50 and older are more likely to say this than those ages 18 to 49 (46% vs. 38%). Younger Israelis are instead more likely than older Israelis to say that Biden is favoring the Israelis too much (30% vs. 22%).

Views of the U.S.

Israelis broadly view the U.S. in a positive light: 77% have a favorable view of the country, including 43% who say they have a very favorable opinion. While the U.S. is still largely popular, the share of Israelis who have a favorable view of it fell 10 points since last year, when 87% held this view.

Demographic patterns in views of the U.S. are similar to confidence in Biden:

- Jewish Israelis are much more likely than Arab Israelis to have a favorable view of the U.S. (90% vs. 29%). Among Arabs, favorability ratings of the U.S. are at an all-time low, having dropped 15 points since 2023.
- Views of the U.S. are generally more positive among Israelis on the ideological right (85%) and center (84%) than on the left (55%). While favorable views are down from last year among those across the ideological spectrum, the decrease is three times larger among those on the left (down 22 points) than those in the center or on the right (both down 7 points).
- Israelis ages 50 and older are more likely than their younger counterparts to have a favorable view of the U.S. (85% vs. 72%).

Additionally, Israelis who have confidence in Biden are more likely to have favorable views of the U.S. than those who have less confidence (97% vs. 51%). Similarly, those who approve of his handling of the Israel-Hamas war have more favorable views of the U.S. than those who disapprove (97% vs. 64%).

Who Israelis want to play a role in diplomatically resolving the war

In the survey conducted March 3 to April 4, 2024 – amid off-again, on-again ceasefire negotiations mediated by Egypt and Qatar with involvement by senior U.S. officials – a large majority of Israelis (72%) said the U.S. should play a major role in diplomatically resolving the war between Israel and Hamas.

Egypt received the next largest share of support for diplomatic involvement, with 45% of Israelis saying it should play a major role.

On the other end of the spectrum, just 27% of Israelis support Qatar playing a major role; similar shares say this about Saudi Arabia (29%) and the United Nations (24%).

Support for a major U.S. role is broadly popular across the Israeli ideological spectrum. However, those on the left are more open than those on the right to involvement by other diplomatic actors.

Both Jews (74%) and Arabs (63%) in Israel favor the U.S. playing a major part in resolving the Israel-Hamas war.

3. Assessing the future in light of the war

Despite their mixed opinions about the military response to Hamas and concerns about the war expanding and going on a long time, most Israelis were confident in our recent survey (conducted in March and early April) that their country will achieve its war aims. By roughly two to one, more feel optimistic than pessimistic about the future of Israel’s national security.

However, this optimism does not extend to the prospect of peaceful coexistence alongside a Palestinian state, which Israelis now see as less likely than they did in recent years. A plurality of Israelis also think that Israel should govern the Gaza Strip after the war.

Success against Hamas

About two-thirds of the Israeli public believes Israel will achieve its goals in the war against Hamas. The largest share says that Israel will definitely succeed (40%) while 27% says Israel will probably succeed. Another 18% think Israel will probably or definitely fail.

About three-quarters of Israeli Jews believe the country will achieve its goals in the war, while Israeli Arabs are far less certain. More than a third of Israeli Arabs believe the country will be successful, but 42% believe it will fail and 19% are not sure.

Optimism about Israel’s prospects in the war is widespread among right-leaning Israelis – and particularly among people who have a favorable view of Netanyahu. Fully 95% of Netanyahu supporters express confidence in the eventual success of their country’s military campaign against Hamas.

More than half of centrist Israelis are similarly optimistic, but another quarter of them are not sure. Left-leaning Israelis have a different outlook: The largest share (45%) say Israel will definitely or probably fail.

Israelis who believe that the military response to Hamas has been about right are more likely to say Israel will succeed (86%) than those who think it has not gone far enough (76%) and those who think it has gone too far (25%). Indeed, among those who think Israel has gone too far, more think the country will fail in its war against Hamas than succeed (55% vs. 25%).

Israel’s future national security

Thinking about the future, 53% of Israelis say they feel generally optimistic about their country’s national security. This is almost double the share of Israelis who say they feel pessimistic (28%). Another 17% are not sure.

Jewish Israelis are three times as likely as Arab Israelis to have a positive outlook on the future of national security: 63% of Jews say they are optimistic, while only 21% of Arabs agree.

Among Israeli Jews, those who are more religiously observant express a greater degree of optimism for the future of Israel’s security. About eight-in-ten Haredi (“ultra-Orthodox”) and Dati (“religious”) Jews say they are optimistic, compared to about half of Hiloni (“secular”)

Jews. Among Hiloni Jews, another 29% say they are pessimistic and 21% volunteer another answer.

Those on the ideological right are much more likely to feel positively about the future of national security than those on the left or in the center. About seven-in-ten right-leaning Israelis are optimistic, while less than half of those in the center and less than a third of those on the left feel the same.

Israeli adults who have a favorable view of Netanyahu are significantly more optimistic about the future of the country’s security than are those who view him unfavorably (81% vs. 34%). More broadly, supporters of the emergency unity government (which includes the original coalition as well as former opposition party National Unity, led by war cabinet member Benny Gantz) are also more optimistic than those who do not support the unity government (75% vs. 27%).

The future of Gaza

Four-in-ten Israelis believe Israel should govern the Gaza Strip after the war ends. Others believe Gaza should be under control of the Palestinian Authority, whether with Mahmoud Abbas (also known as Abu Mazen) in leadership (6%) or without him (12%). An additional 14% say the people who live in Gaza should decide who governs them, while smaller shares mention the United Nations (4%) or Hamas (2%), and 16% say they do not know.

Governance by Israel

- Israeli Jews are much more likely than Israeli Arabs to say that Israel should control Gaza (50% vs. 3%).
- A large majority (77%) of Haredi and Dati Jews would prefer that Gaza be under Israeli control, while only 28% of Hiloni Jews agree.
- Among right-leaning Israelis, approximately seven-in-ten believe Israel should govern Gaza. Only 16% of those in the center and 6% on the left agree.

Self-determination

- Over a third of Israeli Arabs say that the question of governance should be decided by the people who live in Gaza. Only 8% of Israeli Jews agree.
- Three-in-ten Israelis on the ideological left say Gazans should decide who governs them. Among center-leaning Israelis, 17% feel the same. Just 4% of those who position themselves on the ideological right support self-determination for Gazans.

Governance by the Palestinian Authority, Hamas or third parties

- Israeli Arabs are more likely than Jews to support a Palestinian Authority national unity government, either with Abbas' leadership (11% vs. 5%) or without Abbas (18% vs. 10%). They are also more supportive than Israeli Jews of Hamas regaining control over the Gaza strip (9% vs. 0%).
- Older Arabs in Israel (ages 50 and older) are more supportive of Hamas' leadership in Gaza than are those ages 18 to 49 (15% vs. 6%).

Views of Palestinian leaders

On the whole, few Israelis have favorable views of the two Palestinian leaders we asked about.

In the case of Mahmoud Abbas (also known as Abu Mazen), president of the Palestinian Authority, only 9% of Israelis say they see him in a positive light. This is largely unchanged since Pew Research Center last asked about him in 2015.

Similarly, only 12% of Israelis have favorable views of Abbas' fellow Fatah member, Marwan Barghouti, who has been detained by Israel since 2002.

While Abbas is more popular among Arab Israelis (25%) than Jewish Israelis (4%), he is still seen more unfavorably than not among Arabs. In the case of Barghouti, however, he is broadly popular with Arab Israelis (58%), while fewer than 1% of Jewish Israelis see him in a positive light.

Palestinian statehood and coexistence

Around a quarter of Israelis (26%) think a way can be found for Israel and an independent Palestinian state to coexist peacefully with each other. Half think this is not possible, while another 20% say it depends.

The feeling that peaceful coexistence is possible has decreased 9 percentage points since last year and 24 points since we began asking the question in 2013.

Notably, nearly all of the decline since last year is due to Jewish Israelis shifting their opinions: Today, 19% of Jews think peaceful coexistence is possible, down from 32% who

said the same in 2023. In contrast, Arab Israelis have grown slightly more optimistic about peaceful coexistence, with 49% saying it's possible, up from 41% last year.

Opinion about peaceful coexistence also differs across the ideological spectrum: 60% of those who place themselves on the left think it's possible, compared with 33% of those in the center and 8% of those on the right. The shift from last year has been particularly sharp among Israelis in the ideological center, falling 20 points, compared with a drop of 13 points on the left and 6 points on the right.

Hiloni Jews are split on the question of peaceful coexistence. About a third (34%) think it is possible – much higher than the share of Haredim and Datiim who agree (3% each). Roughly a third of Hilonim say coexistence is not possible.

Where would the Palestinian state be?

Because the Israel-Hamas war is still ongoing and the meaning of “an independent Palestinian state” may have changed for respondents, we also asked a new follow-up question. Those who said peaceful coexistence was possible or who volunteered “it depends,” were asked: “Would you expect the independent Palestinian state to be in the West Bank, in Gaza or both?”

A majority of those who think a Palestinian state may be possible believe that it will be in both the West Bank and Gaza, while smaller (and similar) shares expect it to be only in Gaza or only in the West Bank. The remainder either do not know or think peaceful coexistence between an independent Palestinian state and Israel is unlikely.

Arab Israelis are more likely than Jewish Israelis to think a Palestinian state will be in both places. Jews are more likely than Arabs to say it would be only in Gaza or that they are unsure.

Israelis on the left are much more likely to anticipate an independent Palestinian state in both the West Bank and Gaza than are those in the center or on the right. Those on the right are more likely to foresee an independent Palestinian state in Gaza only.

Among Israelis who think peaceful coexistence with an independent Palestinian state is possible, most believe it will be in both Gaza and the West Bank

Note: Only people who said an independent Palestinian state “Can” coexist peacefully with Israel or “It depends” were asked the second question. The percentages in the bottom of the chart are based on the 46% who were asked the question, not based on all Israeli adults. Source: Survey of Israeli adults conducted March 3-April 4, 2024. Methodology

The data is from a survey of 1,001 Israeli adults conducted face-to-face from March 3 to April 4, 2024. Interviews were conducted in Hebrew and Arabic, and the survey is representative of the adult population ages 18 and older, excluding those in East Jerusalem and non-sanctioned outposts. (The survey also did not cover the West Bank or Gaza.) The survey included an oversample of Arabs in Israel. It was subsequently weighted to be representative of the Israeli adult population with the following variables: gender by ethnicity, age by ethnicity, education, region, urbanicity and probability of selection of respondent.

Here is general information on our international survey research.

Israel survey methodology

Year	2024
Survey	Global Attitudes Survey
Sample design:	Multi-stage, area probability design. Primary sampling units (PSUs) are statistical areas stratified by ethnicity, district, urbanicity and socioeconomic status. Two PSUs are selected with certainty based on population size. The number of PSUs is 200. Up to three contact attempts are made to complete the interview. Individuals within households are selected using computer randomization based on all people ages 18 and older living in the household.
Mode:	Face-to-face
Languages:	Arabic, Hebrew
Fieldwork dates:	March 3-April 4, 2024
Sample size:	1,001
Margin of error:	4.0 percentage points
Representative:	Adult population ages 18 and older (excluding East Jerusalem, non-sanctioned outposts and areas with low population sizes)

Methodological notes:

- Survey results are based on national samples.
- Due to rounding, percentages may not total 100%. The topline “total” columns show 100%, because they are based on unrounded numbers.
- Prior to 2024, combined totals were based on rounded topline figures. Going forward, totals will be based on unrounded topline figures, so combined totals might be different than in previous years.
- Since 2007, Pew Research Center has used an automated process to generate topline figures for its Global Attitudes Surveys. As a result, numbers may differ slightly from those published prior to 2007.
- Not all questions included in the Spring 2024 Global Attitudes Survey are presented in this topline. Omitted questions have either been previously released or will be released in future reports.
